

The ever-widening gap between the rich and the poor, the rise of populists all over the world, the sharing of burdens in the fight against climate change, the injustices in the education system – whatever else current debates are about, they are always about inequality, too. All of these issues are so complex that science is still struggling with them.

This is where we and our Cluster of Excellence come in and investigate "The Politics of Inequality" – the political causes and consequences of inequality.

We are looking for a

Student Assistant for IT support at the Managing Office of the Cluster
"The Politics of Inequality"

up to 40h/month.

Our student assistants will support us in the following tasks related to IT and tech support:

- Setting up and maintaining PC workstations and other IT infrastructure (printers/copiers; screens)
- 1st and 2nd Level IT Support
- Support in using the video conference rig and technical equipment for events
- Coordinating and communicating with technology companies and services
- Research tasks related to soft- and hardware, support in planning and making purchases

Reliable and detail-oriented work habits, an affinity for technology, software knowledge (MS Office, (possibly) Typo3), good communication skills and initiative are of great advantage for these activities.

We offer an interesting, diversified job with close proximity to research and the opportunity to gain experience in science management. Working in a young team and insights into the development of a large research network also provide valuable qualifications for future positions in studies and work.
